$1.50 Per Year In Advance

FRED NIELSEN, TINLEY PASSES 90TH BIRTHDAY

Fred Nielsen, Tinley Park's oldest resident, passed the 90th year of his life's journey Tuesday. In honor of the event fifteen friends and relatives gathered at his home Tuesday evening to celebrate the event.

Mr. Nielsen is hale and hearty and is about every day. He sleeps well and has a good appetite and hopes to live to be 100 years old in which his host of friends join him.

His birthplace was in Germany. When a young man of about nineteen years, he came to America. He can tell interesting accounts of the voyage. He sailed from Hamburg on a sailing vessel and it took seven weeks to cross the Atlantic while today the great ocean liners make the same trip in about five days.

He came to Chicago in 1863 and engaged in the blacksmith business. In 1865 he located in Tinley and pursued the same business. He had his blacksmith shop in the building formerly occupied by Jacob Detwiler. Mr. Nielsen continued in this business until 1893 when he sold out to Mr. Detwiler, who was working for him at the time.

Mr. Nielsen is prominently identified with the upbuilding of Tinley Park. About forty years ago he laid out lots along what is now Oak Park avenue. He sold these lots for $100 apiece and these same lots are now worth thousands of dollars. Mr. Nielsen has had a very interesting life. He reads the newspapers every day and is interested in the events of the day.

Echoes from The Past

Died.—At the home of her son, A. L. Jones, in Bowmanville, Monday morning, November 12, 1900, Mrs. Wesley D. Jones, died aged 70 years. The death of Mrs. Jones came as a surprise to the many friends here, few of whom knew that she was sick. With her husband and daughter she returned several weeks ago from an extended trip to Oregon and was in usual good health until about two weeks ago, when she went to Bowmanville and in alighting from the train injured a limb which had bothered her somewhat before. From this injury blood-poisoning at length set in and finally ruled over life itself. The decedent was born Helen Granger and she was one of the earliest residents of Homer township, not very far distant from this place. She was a lady of rare good character and qualities and left an impress for good upon those who knew her. In her own family she was the queenly wife and mother and in an unusual degree won the adoration of the family circle. She leaves besides her husband, three sons, Wright of Boston; Alonzo of Neb., and A. L. of Bowmanville also two daughters, Mrs. Henry Hotchkiss of Blue Island and Miss Lottie Jones of this place.

Seek To Save Homes From Foreclosure

The Illinois agency for the Home Owners Loan Corporation, at the request of officials in Washington, is taking immediate steps to postpone foreclosure proceedings on all defaulted home properties for which Federal assistance has been requested. It was announced this week by Wm. G. Donne, state manager.

When foreclosure cases come up for motion, it is planned to submit a formal petition to the court in which postponement of action is requested for a sufficient length of time to enable the Corporation to refund the indebtedness. As quickly as the Corporation has passed upon the individual application, a certified record will be submitted to the court, stating whether the loan has been approved or rejected. Other than in exceptional distress cases, the H. O. L. C. has not intervened in foreclosure proceedings up to this time. The proposed plan closely follows procedure urged by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Connecticut for use in that state.

It is believed by Mr. Donne that this action will give home owners about to lose their homes thru foreclosure, a "breathing spell" during which the Corporation can decide whether it can make a loan, or during which time the home owner can arrange other refinancing.

L. C. Stephens Promoted To Division Manager

L. C. Stephens, district manager of the Public Service company at Joliet for the past 13 years, has been promoted to divisional manager, in charge of the entire southern portion of the territory served by the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois.

Mr. Stephens will have charge of the territory extending from the southern limits of Chicago to Chilli-cothe, and from Indiana to Iowa. The reason for this, it was explained, was to have closer supervision of the southern end of the corporation's property.

The change is to take effect immediately. Mr. Stephens' successor however, has not yet been named.

Mr. Stephens' office will be located in the Public Service building in Joliet and he will continue to make Joliet his place of residence.

Twenty-seven years ago next February Mr. Stephens went to work for the Public Service company in Oak Park and has remained in its employ since. He came to Joliet 13 years ago as district manager.

Mr. Stephens is an active figure in civic and community life of Joliet and is a member of the high school board.

Orland Boy Hurt In Football Rush

Floyd Cooper, son of Mrs. H. Adele Cooper of Orland Park was the victim of a football accident last Friday night in which he sustained several broken bones. He was standing on the sidelines watching a practice football game on the St. Michael church grounds when the ball was suddenly kicked in his direction and before he could get out of the way, the onrushing players knocked him down. The bone in the left leg directly above the ankle was broken, also two smaller bones. Immediately after the accident he was carried into St. Michael's church and Rev. W. A. Gorey got in touch with Dr. W. V. Hedges of Frankfort and the injured lad was taken to the Silver Cross hospital at Joliet where Dr. Hedges set the broken bones.

Floyd was brought home Monday afternoon and is getting along nicely. He has had a host of callers every day. His many friends wish for a speedy recovery.

Burn Chinch Bugs Campaign On

A "Burn the chinch-bug campaign" is underway in Illinois. The question is often asked where will chinch-bugs be found during the winter?

From 80 to 90 per cent of the chinch bugs will be found along the south and west sides of fences, hedges, roadsides and woodlands, in the bases of bunch-forming grasses, such as prairie grass, broom sedge, and blue stem, and in any sheltered spot where there is a moderate amount of dry grass and leaves. They are nearly always more numerous where such cover is exposed to the afternoon sun.

Another question often asked is do many bugs winter in corn stalks?

Examinations of 588 hills of corn in twelve fields of standing corn stalks in the most severely infested area in the state, showed an average of less than one bug to two hills. The average number of bugs found in the hedges, bunch grass and other, favorite cover adjoining these same fields was 196 per square foot in the 138 square feet examined. These facts indicate that less than 2 per cent of the wintering chinch-bugs will be found in corn stalks. By the time the stalks were broken down and raked into windrows so that they could be burned, practically no bugs should be left in them.

Careful examinations have shown that 90 per cent of the chinch-bugs wintering in woodlands will be found within fifty feet of the south and west sides. The burning over of the entire woodland, therefore, is unwarranted, as the damage to young trees is likely to be severe. Very few bugs will be found wintering in small grain stubble. Not enough bugs can be killed here to warrant burning.

Chinch-bugs are not all in their winter quarters before the first of November. Burning attractive cover before that date does not kill the bugs but only causes them to seek shelter in some other place. Effective burning may be done during any dry period from November, first to April first. Burning in the fall is by far the best practice, as it not only kills the bugs directly exposed to the heat of the fire, but by destroying the cover, cause the death of others from exposure.

In a moderate wind chinch-bugs probably fly more than ten miles. Burning the bugs on one or two farms, therefore, will not lessen the damage the following season to any extent. To accomplish results general burning must be done over a good sized area, such as a township, or better, a county. Each female chinch-bug killed during this fall and winter means, on the average, 150 fewer, first-brood bugs in the wheat next spring and 10,000 fewer second-brood bugs in the corn next summer. The best results from burning will be had on days when the wind is not strong and the cover is dry enough to burn the ground. The fire should be worked against the wind.

Further information on the chinch bug can be had from the County Agent, the Agricultural Departments of the various states as well as from the Agricultural Colleges. Any interested farmer can get this information upon request. Most of it is free or a very small charge is made to cover postage, etc.

Y. M. C. A. of Will County Raising Funds

O. E. McGovney of Mokena is assisting in the drive now on in Will County to raise funds for the Y. M. C. A. funds. In a letter sent out by Mr. McGovney appealing for subscriptions to the fund, he says:

"This is the day when all moral and religious agencies must do their best work. The idle time of millions of discouraged folks is a serious matter. The sorry plight of thousands of unemployed young men is a cause of real concern. Recently it was discovered that there are in Illinois alone more than 150,000 young men around the age of 20 years who are simply migrating from place to place; they travel by hitch hiking or on freight cars.

"The Illinois State Y. M. C. A. in a day like this has been taxed to capacity to meet the problems of young men. I am in a position to know that this Christian agency, thru its 54 buildings in Illinois, thru its 140 Hi-Y Clubs, thru its employment bureaus, and thru its free gymnasiums, its free beds and its splendid attempt to build up morale in defeated young men, has done a heroic work in these difficult days.

"I am sending this letter to a few friends hoping they may respond in this hour of need to a cause which for 15 years has served young men and boys of Illinois."

Anyone wishing to aid this cause can make their contribution to Mr. McGovney who will see that it is forwarded to the Y. M. C. A.

Rock Island Big Factor In Supplying Local Employment

Eighty-one years ago this month the Rock Island railroad operated its first passenger train from Chicago to Joliet and since that time has played a big part in the development and upbuilding of the communities between Chicago and Joliet and thousands of other communities in 14 different states. A very large percentage of the people residing in the suburban territory along the Rock Island in this section are in the employ of the railroad either in their Chicago offices or shops or on their trains. Many if these people depend entirely on the Rock Island for their livelihood.

The railroads have made possible the development of the great middle west and there is no other mode of transportation that can rival the railroads or afford as much employment as they do.

The grand fathers of some of the residents of Mokena helped in the construction of the Rock Island railroad and the editor's grand father, Martin Heim was one of the old settlers who helped build the Rock Island thru this section.

WOLF RD. CASE BEING WATCHED VERY KEENLY

All the Wolf road boosters in Frankfort township are keenly interested in the hearing of the condemnation suit for the Wolf road right of way thru the C. M. Cleveland farm south of Mokena. The suit is scheduled to start next Monday morning unless continuances are granted. In that event, Supervisor Wm. Kampe of Frankfort says the new hearing date will be set right away. The county right of way committee is determined to bring this case to a show down.

C. H. Warning, J. P. Bauch and Charles Elsner also own property along the proposed right of way and they have signed the right of way dedication papers and have been paid for fence rights by the county.

The Wolf road boosters feel it would be foolish for the county to consider any other way for the reason that the expense of a new survey would be created and the county would run into several condemnation suits instead of one and the money that has already been paid for fence rights would be lost. The straight line is the most logical from an engineering standpoint.

One Spike Won't Build A Railroad

A single spike just marks a good intention. A thousand of them will hold together a track that will carry the weight of a great train. A single deposit in a savings account, like a spike, will rust from disuse without company. But add to those deposits regularly and you'll soon have enough to support the crushing weight of an emergency—or build you a ballasted roadbed to Easy Street.

ILLINOIS State News

State Auditor Edward J. Barrett announced that he had sent a letter to all building and loan associations in Illinois urging them to delay action on foreclosures of homes until the Home Owners' Loan corporation has had an opportunity to help the home owner. In his letter Barrett stated that the legislature will consider an amendment to the building and loan act to permit building and loan associations to exchange their delinquent mortgages for bonds of the H. O. L. C.

The first special session of the legislature convened and listened to an ardent appeal from the governor upon the unavoidable necessity of emergency action. "There are open to us only two courses," said Governor Horner. "Either we must provide additional funds without delay or shut our relief stations and abandon over 223,000 families—aggregating nearly a million persons—to privation, suffering, and even death. Either the state of Illinois must help them now or there is no help for them." All the program bills covering the subjects of poor relief and recovery were introduced in both houses and, without being read except by title, were advanced to second reading.

Federal Judge Louis FitzHenry of Springfield took the oath of office as judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the United States courthouse in Chicago. Six members of the gang which kidnaped August Luer last July 10, escaped the electric chair demanded by the state, but were convicted in Edwardsville and sentenced to prison terms ranging from life to five years' duration. A Circuit court jury found that Mrs. Lillian Chessen, Randolph Eugene Norvell, and Percy Michael Fitzgerald should spend the remainder of their lives in an Illinois prison. Lesser members of the gang, including Charles Chessen, husband of the convicted woman, received lighter terms.

Federal Judge John P. Barnes in Chicago found Attorney Henry L. Blim guilty of contempt and sentenced him to three months in jail as a result of his testimony before the grand jury investigating the income affairs of William H. Malone, former chairman of the state tax commission. Blim's story of the disposition of $7,500 of a $12,500 fee received from the Pullman company for tax adjustment services was characterized as a "fairly tale" by Special Assistant United States Attorney Leslie E. Salter. The government sought to show that this $7,500 went to Malone.

Bond in the sum of $137,900 was given by State Representative Jesse Hall, former East Peoria mayor, and Eugene P. Welcher, East Peoria, both former members of the East Peoria sanitary drainage district board, charged with embezzlement, forgery and bribery. The two men, together with William Free and James W. Betzon, were indicted by the Tazewell county grand jury.

Merlin Voight, Le Mar, Wis., was exonerated at Morris of blame in the auto truck collision in which Dominic Bersano, forty-seven, Braceville, was killed, and Joe Serana of Braceville critically injured.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

SAFETY FIRST AND COMFORT NEXT

IF ANYONE should ask Jerry Muskrat how to build a house the advice he would give would be something like this: "Build it for safety first and comfort next." There isn't one of the little people of the Green Meadows and the Green Forest but will say that this is the best of good advice. Even Peter Rabbit will say so, though as everybody knows he doesn't live up to it. If safety means hard work Peter will take a chance with danger every time. Even when his own comfort is concerned Peter will avoid the work if possible. Isn't it funny how lazy and shortsighted some people can be?

"It is Nothing but a Pile of Rubbish," Said He.

But Jerry Muskrat isn't one of these. Oh, my, no. No, indeed. When he dug those tunnels from the cellar of his house down under water over to the bank and to the deepest part of the Smiling Pool he was thinking of safety and preparing for it. And safety was his first thought as he built the walls above water. He knew that when Jack Frost should come and cover the Smiling Pond with ice it would be an easy matter for Old Man Coyote and Reddy and Granny Fox to get to his house. If the walls were thin and poorly made they might be torn open. Then, too, the cold might creep through and freeze him. For some reason, just why he didn't know, he had a feeling that the coming winter was going to be extra cold.

So Jerry made those walls extra thick. He chose the stoutest cattails and rushes he could find and dug up the biggest roots he could manage. He went a little way up the Laughing Brook for sticks. All these things he towed across the Smiling Pool to the new house and worked into the walls. He dug up mud and worked it in with the rushes and cattails and sticks in a way that only he and Paddy the Beaver can.

Peter Rabbit, watching from the bank, turned up his nose. "It is nothing but a pile of rubbish," said he. In truth Peter wasn't to be blamed for saying so. That is what it looked like—just a great pile of rubbish. What Peter couldn't see was that in the center of it was a nice big roomy chamber, one big enough for Jerry and two or three friends to sleep in in comfort. Not only this, but it was high enough to be dry even though the water should rise quite a lot in the Smiling Pool. And this nice dry chamber connected with the water cellar beneath, from which led tunnels to the bank and to deep water.

So, while in his tunnels and thick walls Jerry was looking out for safety, in the nice, big, dry bedroom he was looking out for comfort. If he couldn't have had the safety with the comfort he would have chosen the safety. But as long as he could have both he intended to have both.

Higher rose the walls and presently the bedroom was roofed over. As had been the case in the old house, tiny spaces were left for fresh air to come in and bad air to go out. No one knows better than Jerry how necessary fresh air is, no matter how cold the weather. So he took care not to seal the top of his roof with mud, that the air might pass through. Many nights Jerry worked and when at last he laid the last stick and the last bulrush in place he felt that his new house was worth all that he had gone through. All the hard work, and even the terrible experience with Hooty the Owl.

Life Has So Much

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

LIFE has so little, so you say. But have you looked at life today. Or have you only looked within. At your own care and your own sin? Some live forever in a cell, With all the world in which to dwell, By their own troubles held and caught, Poor self-made prisoners of thought.

There are so many other things Besides some care to which one clings; Such beauties, pleasures, harmonies, Why shut yourself away from these? Why live a hermit in your mind When you might walk abroad and find Far greater matters than your cares, Concern yourself with life's affairs?

Life has so little, you have found, Because you shut yourself around With walls of thinking, musty walls, The while a world of wonder calls. Old thoughts will bring you only grief, New thoughts will bring you new belief, New hopes to find, new heights to touch.

New joy to know—life has so much. © 1933, Douglas Malloch.—WNU Service.

GRAPHIC GOLF

FLAT LIE PREVENTS TILTING WRISTS

STEWART MAIDEN, who piloted Bobby Jones along the paths of golf skill and is one of the foremost instructors of the present day, believes that the club with the flat lie is an easier club than the upright to play. His reason is that the player can thus address the ball with the hands in a natural position and a straight left arm. With the upright lie the golfer might find it necessary to tilt his wrists to accommodate a suitable position for the clubhead. This position is almost impossible to maintain on the downward sweep of the clubhead with any degree of exactness and power. Naturally the lie to use is that which the player can most easily adapt himself to. In the majority of cases and particularly for the player of average height or less, the flatter lie will be found more suitable.

ing, add one tablespoon of chopped onion and the same of chopped pimiento. Cook for five minutes. Add two tablespoons of flour, and when well mixed add two cupfuls of canned tomatoes and cook until the mixture thickens slightly. Add one cup of peas, corn, lima beans or carrots, one and one-half cup of boiled rice, one tablespoon of chopped parsley, two teaspoons of salt and one-half cupful of grated cheese; add a dash of cayenne and bake for twenty minutes in a hot oven.

Stuffed Eggplant.

Cut one eggplant into halves and cook in boiling salted water until almost tender. Drain well, scoop out the centers. Melt one tablespoonful of butter, add one small onion minced, and cook until a light brown. Chop the centers taken from the eggplant, add one cup each of bread crumbs and stewed tomatoes, one tablespoon of chopped parsley, one teaspoon of salt and one-eighth teaspoon of pepper. Fill the eggplant halves and cover with buttered crumbs. Bake in a moderate oven.

BEAUTY TALKS

By

MARJORIE DUNCAN

TO PREVENT INFECTIONS

A TINY scratch may, through neglect, cause a great deal of trouble. Precautions should be taken to prevent infection when the skin shows any cut, scratch, sore or abrasion. Such precautions should become as much a habit as locking your door against thieves, or eyeing traffic before crossing a street. The time to prevent infection is before the trouble starts. Be at least one step ahead of the treacherous little germ which might sight the abraded skin, decide it was a lovely spot and stake his residence claim. Beat him to it by disinfecting and sealing all sore spots. Then forget them—everything's safe!

The bathroom medicine cabinet of every home should contain a bottle plainly labelled disinfectant, conveniently placed. If you have only one room or are boarding, give the disinfectant an honorary place among your toilet preparations. A scratch, a pinprick, a pimple—touch them with disinfectant before using powder and rouge.

When iodine enjoyed its prestige as the great and only, one would often take chances rather than sally forth brown-spotted. Today there are many effective disinfectants—stainless and odorless. The good ones cleanse and seal, having both disinfectant and astringent elements. Your disinfectant should do both. An application which seals without disinfecting is very dangerous.

Fever blisters and sore pimples should be touched with an astringent disinfectant several times daily. Sore nostrils resulting from excessive use of a handkerchief when suffering from colds should receive the same treatment. In fact, handkerchiefs should not be used under such conditions. Use soft, cleansing tissues instead. And don't rub inflamed nostrils, blot them. It may seem drastic to use a stinging disinfectant instead of a gentle salve, but the discomfort is only for a second and the cure is far more rapid.

Every physician knows of cases of simple little injuries which caused grave trouble because the patient was either ignorant of first aid methods of preventing infection or neglectful. Don't put off for tomorrow the treatment of a fresh sore or cut or scratch. Do it now. Tomorrow infection may have set in. Mothers should teach children to come for treatment of cut fingers, sore knees, splinters and scratches. Children should learn such precautionary measures at a very early age. It should be just as much a matter of habit to disinfect a bleeding scratch as to take an umbrella when it rains.

ABOUT THE SPINE

I AM sure you all know what an important part the spine plays in the proper functioning of your nervous, circulatory and muscular systems. In every organ cell, hair, nail and pore of your entire body. For each bone in the body, each part of the body is directly or indirectly connected with the spine. The thigh, leg and hip bone are connected with the spine by the pelvic arch; the arms, shoulders and ribs are so connected. The skull, which houses the delicate brain which is you—and determines just what you are and will be, is connected with the spine at the neck. The brain is the powerful sending station. The nerves are the transmitting wires. They all run through the spinal column to each and every part of the body.

Can't you see for yourself how very important it is that the spine be kept pliable and resilient—in good working order? If it is stiff and cramped it affects the functioning of every part of the body. The nerves are too tense or too slack and the heart action is changed from normal, the lungs do not take in fresh air deeply and powerfully, or expel the vitiated air so promptly and completely. The blood does not circulate so vigorously and perform its duty as carrier of vital food matter to the organs. The marrow of the spinal cords grows anemic.

Of course, you have often been told to "keep a stiff backbone." But that is a figurative expression which applies only to mental courage. As paradoxical as it may seem, you cannot have the stiff backbone of courage unless you have the flexible backbone of physical health. You may have it for a while, through sheer will power.

The average young person of today keeps a flexible spine—swimming, golf, tennis, dancing. This era of sports is wonderful from a health standpoint. It is the middle-aged woman, or the too-much-stay-at-home woman who needs to give serious thought to keeping her spine flexible. Especially those women who are not doing housework. And the women and girls who sit at desks throughout the working day. Those who follow sedentary occupations.

Do you find yourself avoiding stooping to pick things from the floor? Do you dislike doing this or that because your shoulders or your neck or your hips seem stiff? Then it is time for you to commence exercising your spine.

Upside Down House Built in California

WHEN this house was erected in California its owner wished a good view of San Francisco and Sausalito, so the usual procedure in house building was reversed. The cellar and garage are where the attic generally is, and the attic is in the basement.

SYNOPSIS

A girl finds herself in a taxicab in New York with a strange man who speaks of "an awful shock." He leaves her for a moment, and she drives on, for she fears him. She stops at the Baltimore, wondering who she is. Her memory is gone. She hires a wedding ring. At the hotel a young woman vanishes with the girl's $900. An elderly woman, Mrs. Oscar Du Val, cordially greets the nameless girl, addressing her as "Doris," wife of Mrs. Du Val's son, Rocky. Rocky is abroad, and Doris is taken to the home of Mrs. Du Val and her sculptor husband, Oscar. Doris falls in love with Rocky's photograph, but cannot remember having married him. Visiting a store, a saleswoman insists she hide from observation. Rocky returns. He demands to know who she is and why his wife sent her to his home. She cannot tell him. They agree, for the sake of his parents, to pretend they are husband and wife. Rocky takes Doris to his New York apartment to confront his wife. He finds the flat empty. Doris sees the real wife's photograph and recognizes her as the girl who stole her $900. Doris finally tells Rocky she has lost her memory. In a newspaper they see a headline, "Killer Bride's Gun Found; Diane Merrell's Father Identifies It." Doris faints. When she recovers, her memory has not returned. Rocky informs her he is going to take her to Canada by motor. They set out.

As Doris stared she remembered her promise to Rocky that she would keep her face turned away from any people they met. She bent her head, and turned over and over a black leather purse belonging to the real Doris.

The car was coming nearer. In a moment it would be past. But as it approached it slackened. It came almost to a stop. Someone shouted:

"Doris!"

Startled she looked up. A dark-eyed girl in a green evening dress had called.

"Oh—I beg your pardon!" said the girl. "I thought you were someone I knew."

A blond young man stuck his head forward. "It's Rocky's car."

"There's Rocky! Well, I thought you were in Europe, you dope!"

"He's leading a double life!"

The party, in evening clothes, got down. Rocky, approaching Doris with a clam in each hand, looked at them steadily. If he was surprised and chagrined, he did not show it.

"Have a clam," he said.

The girl in the green evening dress staggered up and seized one of the clams. Two unsteady young men supported each other.

"Clams! Jus' what I wan'ed."

"Good old Rocky's got clams!"

Rocky was climbing in the car beside Doris. He was starting up the engine.

"Hey, wait a minute. Where you going? Say, wait a minute, Rocky."

His friends were running after him. The girl in the green evening dress jumped on the running board.

"What's your hurry, Rocky? We're all friends here, aren't we?"

She looked at Doris.

"This is Miss Smith, my father's secretary. I'm just driving her down to my father's house."

The girl closed one of her big eyes. She exposed a dimple in her browned cheek. "Pretty name, Smith."

Rocky frowned. "Go on, beat it, will you, Molly? I've really got to go."

"Rocky, the saint! Rocky—this pure young man." Eyes looked piously heavenward. Then the dimples appeared again. "Never mind, Rocky. I like you all the better for it."

She jumped down from the car. Rocky's face was set and grim. Without a backward glance he started up the car and got away.

Doris was red and angry. The car fumed on. The red sun appeared, a wrathful eye in the east.

"I'm awfully sorry about that," murmured Rocky.

Doris fixed her eyes on the flaming sky. Her good-humor had gone. She was indignant with Rocky, resentful of her false position.

"That girl, I suppose, is a friend of Doris—the real Doris. And she'll tell her you're gadding about the country with a—"

"With a—is good. She'll make it good, anyway."

"I think you'd better let me out here."

"So what?"

"So you can go and find Doris."

"What do I want to find Doris for? I want—"

"You're not acting very well about Doris."

"I know it. I can't act well about women, and I'm acting awfully about you. Better worry about that."

Doris was silent. She was being a fool as usual. She knew that Rocky was acting in this extraordinary fashion for her own safety. Whatever peril threatened her, it was necessary that she get to Canada. Why Canada?

She gave it up. If she was going to trust Rocky she would have to trust him, and stop criticizing. Meantime it was fun being with Rocky. Sooner or later this companionship between them would have to end. He would go back to Doris. Doris would have him all her life—

She sat up very straight. She was being sentimental again. If Rocky was going to be so nice, she would fall in love with him all over. And he did have a wife. It was a good thing those people on the road had reminded her.

Once outside of New York, the car made good speed.

Rocky looked at her abruptly. "Put your glasses on again. They're good for little girls. Come on. Don't make me stop the car so that I can put them on you."

Doris complied when she realized that he meant it. It was a subject she was tired arguing about. Rocky was managing things, apparently, with a high hand. But as she looked at him now, his warm face gleaming with a pride in accomplishing something that she felt sure was in the interests of her safety, it was easy to forgive him anything.

Rocky had provided food enough to last them throughout the trip, without stopping at inns. He had explained that by picnicking this way, they would save a good deal of time.

"I'd like to see a paper," Doris announced suddenly, as if the question had not been broached before. Rocky munched a sandwich doggedly.

"I'm sorry," Rocky ate hungrily.

"Well?" Her voice with its high note arrested him. She drew his blue, seriously objecting eyes to her face. His half-eaten sandwich was poised for the next bite.

"Well?" he repeated. "You know the answer to that one, don't you?" His tone was playfully hard. "The last time you happened to read a paper you didn't behave very well." He grinned faintly and took another bite, watching her.

"Oh!" Doris flung out an emancipated arm. "Won't you ever forget that? I could read anything today and not lose my health. Besides I have a feeling there is something in this morning's paper I ought to see. Tell me, please," she leaned over suddenly, "what it's all about."

"Put your glasses on."

"Why?"

"The better to see me with."

She put them on, turning her head to look up and down the road. "Who are those people, do you suppose?" A small automobile had opened its doors to let out a crowd of motorists.

Rocky was already looking. He had even brought out a pair of binoculars.

Leveling them long and earnestly at the group in question, he answered, "As near as I can make out it's a

Not far behind them, another crazy car was speeding. Rocky speeded around a curve, the other car gaining. Rocky's foot came down harder on the gas, but the other one was up alongside of him. It passed him noisily, hitting the front of Rocky's car a jarring whack.

Rocky yelled after him, but the remark was lost in the noise of engines. There was a limp rattle in Rocky's car now. Something besides the fender had been injured. Cursing, Rocky got out.

"H—!" he said after a minute, "I'll have to take this thing to a garage." He peered out at the next sign. They were two miles from a town. He looked sharply at Doris. "And when we stop to have it fixed," he said bleakly, "for G—d's sake, don't speak to anybody!"

CHAPTER VIII

As Doris was beginning to feel sleepy, Rocky's advice seemed hardly as necessary as he thought.

She dozed, vaguely conscious at intervals of tools dropping and the whir of the motor.

Doris started and awoke. She half sat up. An old man who looked as if he might have been one of the founders of the village into which they had strayed was watching her from under his pushed-back hat.

She thought he was going to say something but discovered that he was chewing. He had dark quizzical eyes that drooped faintly at the corners. He must be over eighty. He kept pinching his nose between his thumb and bent forefinger as if he were trying to improve the shape of it, but otherwise paid Doris his undivided attention.

"If you please," she began, "What town is this?"

His eyes glinted at her with such a knowing expression that Doris almost laughed outright. "Don't you know what town you're in?" he finally asked.

"No, I don't," said Doris apologetically. "We were driving through on our way to Canada, when something happened to the car."

"Driving through to Canada, you say?" He advanced slightly, putting one foot on the fender and clapping a veiny hand over the knee. "Been traveling long?"

"Oh yes, ever since this morning." Gradually she was growing less ecstatic over this quickly formed friendship. The place was getting on her nerves. Rocky had taken off his coat and healthy bootlegger who's taken his wife and family out for a picnic." He laughed, but didn't seem overwhelmingly amused. "Shall we go on?"

They got back into the car, soon making up the time lost in lunching. Rocky's plan was to reach Vermont by nightfall.

In the next town their car went cautiously through the business street. As it passed a news stand, Doris pushed her glasses above her eyes for an instant. There was a headline—

The car lurched forward.

"Don't be a fool, Doris," unreasonable words poured from Rocky: "This is no time to strain your eyes trying to read a paper. If you would only do what I ask!"

Doris, with the glasses slipped back into place, looked at Rocky. His lips were tense in a desperate sort of annoyance. She wondered what had upset him. His eyes moved with a light wariness across the road in front of them. He was quiet for a while.

Towards nightfall, they neared the Vermont border-line. A little before dark, Rocky stopped the car and they got out for a picnic supper. Doris asked him where they were going to spend the night.

"In the car," he answered grimly. "This trip doesn't end for nobody or nothin' until we get to Canada."

"You are in a hurry," she answered. "I think you could at least have asked me if I minded not going to a hotel."

"I could have," he replied cheerfully, "but I had my plans all made to drive right through the night."

"And what you say goes!" She gave him an unflinching glance.

"D—n right!" He began to whistle.

It was evident that he was beginning to feel pleased over the day's work.

rolled up his sleeves. It looked as if the job were almost too much for the mechanic alone.

"Come from New York I bet," suggested the old man, "didn't you?"

"Yes," Doris looked at him firmly. "What town did you say this is?"

"This is Edgewater Junction."

Rocky looked up now at the sound of their voices. His eye fell on Doris, a short questioning glance. Doris unburdened herself of a weary gesture. Would they never get out of this place?

"Yes, sir! This is Edgewater Junction." A new expression had come into the old man's eyes. "And a long ways from New York." His eyes gleamed steadily. "You got folks up in Canada?"

"No, or—" Doris hesitated. Perhaps Rocky had relatives there. She wasn't sure why he had selected Canada. He hadn't told her that. "That is," she continued after a minute, "I haven't."

Rocky's warning suddenly loomed. "For G—d's sake don't speak to anybody!" She had been talking steadily to the old man! But fortunately she hadn't run into any complications, at least not until now. She smiled at him as if the conversation were practically over.

The smile was received like confidential information of the utmost importance. The old man removed his foot from the fender and started off in the direction of the door.

Doris watched him through the small mirror above the front seat, glad when he actually had gone. From now on she wouldn't open her lips, not even to say good night to the mechanic. She would watch her step. She closed her eyes.

"It's her, all right."

PAUL IN ASIA MINOR

LESSON TEXT—Acts 13:1-5, 13-15; 14:19-23.

GOLDEN TEXT—And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. Mark 16:15.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Far Away Friends Hear About Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Ship Sets Sail.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Send Missionaries Abroad?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Missionary Obligation.

I. The Beginning of Foreign Missions (vv. 1-12).

This marks the beginning of foreign missions as the deliberately planned enterprise of the church.

1. The gifts of the church at Antioch (v. 1). Young as was Antioch, the new religious center, she had prophets and teachers. When Christ ascended on high, he gave gifts to men for the purpose of perfecting the saints unto the work of the ministry (Eph. 4:8-12). The church does not exist for itself, but for service to others.

2. First missionaries sent forth (vv. 2, 3). Barnabas and Saul were the first foreign missionaries. They went forth by the hands of the church at the command of the Spirit. The work of evangelizing the world was laid so heavily upon these men that they refrained from eating in order to seek the will of God in prayer. They were directed to send forth those whom the Spirit called, teaching us that the real call for service comes from the Spirit.

The Spirit called and the very best men were sent from the church at Antioch. Before sending forth the missionaries, there was a second season of prayer before laying hands upon them, indicating that ordination has its proper place in sending forth missionaries.

3. Preaching the Word of God in Cyprus (vv. 4, 5). Because the gospel is "good news," it is natural for the missionary to go among his acquaintances. Christ commanded the one out of whom a demon had been cast to go to his own house and tell what great things the Lord had done for him (Luke 8:39).

4. Withstood by Elymas, the sorcerer (vv. 6-12). Elymas, under the influence of Satan, sought to turn the mind of Sergius Paulus from the Word of God, and to hinder the gospel as it entered upon its career of conversion of the heathen. Paul denounced him as full of guile and villainy.

II. Paul and Barnabas at Antioch in Pisidia (vv. 13-16).

From Cyprus Paul and Barnabas, with John Mark, went northward to Perga. Here, for some reason, Mark parted company with the missionaries, and returned home. We are not told as to why he went back, but it is a pleasure to know that he later redeemed himself. Before Paul's death, he spoke favorably of Mark, declaring that he had found him profitable unto the ministry (II Tim. 4:11).

Reaching Antioch in Pisidia they entered a synagogue on the Sabbath day. Though Paul was now a missionary to the Gentiles, he did not depart from his custom—to go to the Jew first.

III. Paul and Barnabas Preaching the Gospel in Lystra (Acts 14:19-28).

1. At Iconium (vv. 1-7). Their experience here was much the same as at Antioch. They preached in the synagogue, causing a multitude of Jews and Gentiles to believe. The unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles to the most bitter persecution.

2. The attempt to worship Paul and Barnabas as gods (vv. 8-18). To escape the united assault of the Jews and Gentiles, they fled to Lystra and Derbe, where they preached the gospel. The healing of the lame man occasioned new difficulty. This man was a confirmed cripple, having never walked. On hearing Paul preach, faith was born in his heart (Rom. 10:17). When Paul perceived that he trusted Christ, he called with a loud voice so that all could hear for the man to stand upright. The cure was instantaneous for he leaped and walked. This miracle was so notable that the very thing which should have been a help now became a hindrance. The people sought to worship the missionaries.

3. The stoning of Paul (vv. 19, 20). Wicked Jews from Antioch and Iconium pursued Paul with such relentless hate that they stirred up the people at this place, who had been willing to worship the missionaries, to stone them. This shows that satanic worship can soon be transformed into satanic hate. They not only stoned Paul, but dragged him out of the city for dead. God raised him up, and with undaunted courage Paul pressed on with his duties as a missionary bearing the good news to the lost.

The Name Jesus

If the name Jesus were left out of our prayers, our hymns, and our worship, we would mourn as if the rose were effaced from the cheek of morning, the sun were banished from the heavens, and the sweetest note stricken from the psalm of life.

Proof of Discipline

In his sufferings the Christian is often tempted to think himself forgotten. But his afflictions are the clearest proofs that he is an object of God's fatherly discipline.

MOUNT VERNON ON THE MARKET!

Possibility in Modern Craze for Moving Shrines.

The boyhood home of Captain Cook, the navigator, at Great Ayton, in England, has been sold and is to be taken down, brick by brick, and shipped to Australia, there to be erected in a place of honor for next year's centennial celebration of the founding of the commonwealth of Victoria. When the owners disposed of the house they "expressed a wish that it remain where it had stood, as a monument to the great and noble man, but subsequently agreed to a modified stipulation that it should not be moved outside of the British empire."

It is difficult to see how any genuine sentiment of patriotism or veneration can prompt this tearing down and setting up again in new locations of these ancient landmarks of historical or heroic importance. As well might a rich foreign bibliophile purchase and remove to his own country the house at Stratford in which Shakespeare was born.

Taking away the brick and mortar sunders most of the associations with which the shrine has always been identified. The ground about it is hallowed—the familiarity of the nearer scene; the distant view. The very character of the people of the place imparts a friendly homeliness to it which is utterly lost once it is transplanted to a strange situation among a people who, having no traditions or heroes of their own, must fain buy or borrow them from the old home. Let us hope that no vicissitudes of fortune will ever bring Mount Vernon on the market to see it perhaps carried away piecemeal to the Panama Canal Zone or to the Philippines to gratify a misguided sense of self-aggrandizement on the part of colonial officialdom.—Boston Transcript.

Knew One Bone, at Least

Mr. H—, a teacher, and his wife were discussing the modern way of teaching physiology, as compared with the way they were taught. "Why," said he, "I'll wager there's not a child in school now that can give the name of a single bone in the body."

Elizabeth piped up: "I know the name of one." "What is it?" asked the mother. "Why, it's the crazy bone!"—Indianapolis News.

if you want to

- keep bowels regular and comfortable
- make constipated spells rare as colds
- avoid danger of bowel strain

A doctor will tell you that the careless choice of laxatives is a common cause of chronic constipation.

Any hospital offers evidence of the harm done by harsh laxatives that drain the system, weaken the bowel muscles, and even affect the liver and kidneys.

Fortunately, the public is fast returning to laxatives in liquid form.

Can Constipation be Corrected?

"Yes!" say medical men. "Yes!" say thousands who have followed this sensible medical advice: 1. Select a good liquid laxative. 2. Take the dose that you find suited to your system. 3. Gradually reduce the dose until bowels are moving regularly without assistance.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has the average person's bowels as regular as clockwork in a few weeks' time. Why not try it? Some pill or tablet may be more convenient to carry. But there is no "convenience" in any cathartic that's taken so frequently, you must carry it wherever you go!

What is the "Right" Laxative?

In buying any laxative, read the label. Not the claims, but the contents. If it contains one doubtful drug, don't take it. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a prescriptional

Why Doctors give a liquid laxative

The habitual use of irritating salts, or powerful drugs in the highly concentrated form of pills and tablets is risky.

The properly prepared liquid laxative will bring a perfect movement without discomfort or injury. You need not take a "double dose" a day or two later.

The public can always get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drugstore.

FRANKFORT

FRANKFORT SCHOOL NEWS

A meeting was held in the Frankfort Hall Thursday October 10, for organization of basketball. There were 15 girls and 20 boys present from which June Pfaff, of the girls was chosen captain. Ralph Nieland, of the boys, was chosen captain.

The Seventh Grade of the Frankfort Public School have been studying in Reading, "Home and Home Life." In connection with this, they were asked to write poems or essays. Here are some samples of their work:

MOTHER

Who is always your best friend?
Who will always a helpful hand lend?
Who keeps your room so clean and neat?
And prepares the things we love to eat?

Who never complains how tired she may be?
But always does the things that just suit me.
There is just one, there can be no other,
And everyone knows that this is Mother.

—C. K.

MOTHER

Mother is very sweet,
Without her, life isn't complete.
What would we do without our mother?
For we could never find another.

Without a mother in all our life,
Life would be a great strife.
Mother is our best friend,
And I don't believe any child
Their mother would lend.

"SEE AMERICA"

The children of the school last Monday were delighted to have Mr. and Mrs. Pickering here again this year in a lecture, which is the second of a series called "See America."

The series which he showed were of the great southwest of the United States. With his lecture were shown one-hundred-sixty moving pictures. During the lecture we saw the following: Santa Fe, Grand Canyon, Petrified Forest, Colorado River, Indians of the southwest, Yosemite Park and Catalina Island.

Among the scenes shown were pictures of the second oldest house in the United States. In an old church is a bell which Columbus brought to America.

The Grand Canyon we saw in the moonlight, at dawn, at twilight, after a storm, when the clouds were in it and after a snow storm.

The Indians of the southwest have many dances. The most interesting dance is the snake dance.

Why Should Gov. Horner Throw Mud At Williamson?

Gov. Horner's dogged effort to find some peg in Hiram L. Williamson's 20 year record as state printer upon which to hang scandal is a striking example of the governor's temperance and temper. Every detail of Williamson's administration was audited by independent certified public accountants, not political checkers-up, and found honest.

If Williamson did err it was in liberality toward the small downstate newspapers. These perform an intelligent, useful public service regardless of their politics. Encouragement to them could not be wasteful. They expect, and get, less out of the public pot than any other profession or industry.

Gov. Horner cannot deny that he is now giving state printing contracts to Mort Kallis, brother-in-law of Moe Rosenberg. Kallis is one of the governor's personal group regardless of the fact that he, Kallis, was publicly accused of being involved in a $100,000 printing scandal during the "whoopie" days of the Chicago Sanitary District, complete details of which appeared in the Chicago newspapers at the time.

The governor, standing with the hand of approval on the shoulder of Kallis and using the other hand to throw mud at Williamson, is not an inspiring sight.

From present indications governor Horner is a one-term governor.

TEAMWORK

Claudius E. Wade, Director
Chicago College of Commerce

When a Century of Progress opened in Chicago, much pressure was brought to bear upon President Roosevelt in an effort to have him present but to no avail. A few days ago the American Legion convened at Chicago, and asked that the President favor them with his presence, which he did.

It is evident that the President was endeavoring to smooth out any rough spots remaining as a result of his action on the bonus question; in fact, he admitted that he needed their help, and asked that they lend their aid in gaining prosperity. The text of the President's utterances for the past ten days has been the call to everybody for teamwork.

Civilization is built on teamwork. Savages do not practice teamwork. Each goes forth in search of his own food; each builds his own hovel; each makes his own loincloth; each hews his own canoe. Each is independent of the others. Each is self-contained and self sufficient.

The life of each is precarious, uncertain and comfortless. The moment savages realize the advantages of teamwork, and act on their new intelligence, they cease to be out-and-out savages and begin to travel the path that leads to civilization.

Civilized people formerly practiced little teamwork. It is teamwork that has displaced the canoe by the ocean liner, candles by gas and electric light, the prairie schooner by steam and electric railways, the hook and scythe by the reaper and binder, the spade by the plow and tractor.

All trade, all commerce, all industry sprang from teamwork. So did our schools, our churches. Stop teamwork, and we would revert to an uncivilized life.

If we will dismiss our selfishness, and quit specializing on the making of millionaires and papers; quit chiseling here and there and follow the President's admonitions for teamwork, prosperity in abundance will be upon us before we know it.

Tells How Men and Women Lose Fat

Safe Way Is Wonderful

"I started to take Kruschen and my husband saw what I was doing and asked for some also. Would you believe it, he's lost 12 lbs. in 3 weeks and intends to keep up the good work. I've lost 14 lbs. I am now 138—I was 152. I think Kruschen is simply wonderful." Mrs. J. H. Valentine, Freeport, N. Y.

How would you like to safely and harmlessly lose 15 pounds of fat in a month and at the same time increase your energy and improve your health?

How would you like to lose your double chin and your two prominent hips and abdomen and at the same time make your skin so clean and clear that it will compel admiration?

Get on the scales to-day and see how much you weigh—then get a jar of Kruschen Salts that costs not more than 85 cents and which will last you 4 weeks. Take one half teaspoonful in a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast—cut down on pastry and fatty meats—go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar—and when you have finished the contents of this first bottle weigh yourself again.

After that you'll want to walk around and say to your friends, "One jar of Kruschen Salts is worth one hundred dollars of any fat person's money."

But, refuse imitations—safeguard your health—you lose fat SAFELY with Kruschen. Leading druggists America over sell Kruschen Salts.

Start to-day to get that glorious Kruschen feeling—gain in youthfulness, ambition and activity and be free from constipation, gas, acidity and shortness of breath.

The services last Sunday at the Orland Park M. E. church marked the beginning of the second year of the ministry of Rev. John Mullen in this church. A fair representation of the congregation were present and were amply repaid for coming by hearing a powerful sermon. Pastor Mullen took for his theme the same text he chose for his opening sermon last year: "Possessing one's Possessions". This is an exhortation to believe in your self, in your church and in God. He decried the timidity of the man of little faith, of the lack of self esteem, of the apologetic Christian, of the abasement of those who "in their own eyes are as grasshoppers." He showed that success is there for all those who have the will to possess it and who are willing to pay the price in sacrifice and in effort. The difference between failure and success lies in the degree of willingness to pay the price of success, the price of sacrifice. What those who would "possess their possessions" need is more of Paul's creed, the creed of belief, of action of sacrifice. In these days when it is popular to be a Christian no particular sacrifice or martyrdom is attached to the outward claimant of that title. It is put on as a Sunday cloak or holiday raiment to allow the wearer to join the popular throng without the true belief, the effort and the sacrifice it should entail. What the church of today needs is a "new baptism of self respect", of true dedication to God.

Next Sunday closes the Stewardship Reading Contest. Owing to seemingly endless delay in the receiving of the pamphlet material, the Stewardship booklets will be the only reading requested. A survey of the standing of the three groups or teams shows them to be pretty much on the same footing in the race, so everyone is urged to attend church next Sunday, as the attendance at this service will be the deciding factor in winning or losing for your particular team.

Mr. Geo. Munch, Supt. of the church school, announces that a Halloween party or social is being sponsored by the Young Peoples Social and Recreational Committee for Monday eve, October 30. Just what the nature of the party will be has not been definitely decided upon, but nevertheless, keep that date open and arrange to come, because no matter what form of entertainment is adopted, you are going to enjoy it.

A rare treat is promised for Friday evening, October 27th, when the Junior Choral Club of Joliet will present an evening of song at our church. This is the fifth successful season for this organization which is composed of 50 young negro voices and they have attained much favorable comment on their singing of the beautiful negro spirituals and folk songs. A small charge is being made to cover the expense of their appearance. Everyone is invited and assured of an evening of genuine enjoyment.

The Story Hour for children of the age of 4 to 8 years will be held again on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Navy Day to Be

Observed At The World's Fair

Arrival of the Graf Zeppelin, the staging of a thrilling naval battle, and an old-time fiddlers' contest are among the many attractions on a varied program scheduled for next week at A Century of Progress.

Although the World's Fair will close its gates soon, the management has decided that full programs will be presented until the last day. These include sports events, daily band concerts, free outdoor vaudeville shows, fire-works and many other attractions that have entertained millions during the summer months.

Travel agencies point out that the latter part of October is an ideal time to visit A Century of Progress. Weather conditions are usually ideal at this time of the year, and the rush of summer vacationists being over, the many exhibits may be enjoyed in comfort.

One of the most interesting feature events of the entire Exposition period will get under way on Sunday, October 22, when the national Old Time Fiddlers Contest is staged in the Court of the Hall of Science. Fiddlers from all parts of the United States have entered the event to compete for a list of valuable awards.

Another attraction on Sunday's program is the Louisville Community Chorus of 150 colored singers, in a concert of negro spirituals, in the Court of States at 7 p. m. The chorus is under the direction of R. Alwyn Austin of New York. The Altona, Pa., Junior Band will also be heard in concert during the day.

The fiddlers' contest will continue through Monday, October 23. On Tuesday there will be music by bands from Xavier and St. James academies and the Ladies of Isabella chorus as special features.

In addition to the band concerts, free marionette shows, motor track demonstrations by Barney Oldfield and famous race drivers, there will be a mammoth fireworks show in North Lagoon, Wednesday, Oct. 25.

Visitors to A Century of Progress on Thursday, October 26, will have the opportunity to see the famous Graf Zeppelin as it soars over the grounds sometime during the afternoon. Dr. Hugo Eckener the veteran commander of the giant airship, has announced that he will cruise over the Fair for a half hour on his arrival via Akron Ohio, and will then make for the Curtiss-Wright-Reynolds airport, where the Graf will be moored for a short time. A second cruise over the grounds will be made late in the afternoon, prior to the ship's leaving for Akron on its return voyage to Germany.

The Graf Zeppelin left Friedrichshafen, on October 14, and comes to the Fair via South America, Miami, and Akron.

A realistic naval engagement will be the feature of Navy Day, Friday, October 27. United States marines and sailors will depict the landing from battleships on a foreign shore. The east side of the North Lagoon will be held by the "enemy", protected by bulwarks of sandbags. An attacking force will embark from the west side of the Lagoon in navy cutters under cover of artillery fire.

There will be machine-gun and rifle fire by both attacking and defending forces, reproducing the historic landing at Vera Cruz in 1914. An address by Admiral W. H. Standley, U. S. N., chief of naval operations, band concerts, sailor's chantes and other events will be staged on the Floating Theater as part of the Navy day celebration. The night fireworks display will be the most brilliant of the Fair period.

Saturday, October 28, the program includes concerts by the Alexandria Mo. Boys and Girls Band; Springfield and Wyoming, la., bands; a Charles Wakefield Cadman music festival and spectacular fireworks.

The two silver-hued dirigibles that have carried thousands of visitors over the grounds of A Century of Progress will be brought into action for the night celebration of Navy Day at the World's Fair, Friday, October 27.

Brilliant electric signs will be strung along the sides of the two Goodyear blimps. One will flash the slogan "Strong Navy," while the other will blaze forth "Strong Nation."

They will cruise over the lagoons before and after the spectacular Navy Day fireworks display.

Included in the pyrotechnic show will be immense set pieces, painting pictures in fire and color of events and persons connected with the history of our navy.

The likeness of President Franklin D. Roosevelt will be flashed on another striking set-piece, while others will depict the insignia of the navy, and the American flag.

The outstanding feature of Navy Day will be a realistic naval sham battle in North Lagoon.

A defending force will be flung along the east side of the lagoon, hidden by barricades of sandbags.

As the attacking force nears the "enemy" shore the men will jump from their boats, rush thru the shallow water and victoriously overpower the defenders.

From 3 to 4:30 p. m. there will be a special program on Floating Theater in North Lagoon.

The National Broadcasting Company will carry a part of the program starting at 3:30 p. m.

Schools, civic organizations, public officials and churches co-operating with a committee appointed by Admiral Cluverius for the celebration of Navy Day.

One of the principal attractions of Navy Day at the World's Fair will be the U. S. Navy exhibit in the Federal Building.

The U. S. S. Constitution, forty-four gun frigate, follows the Richard in the line of ship models.

History of the United States flag will be told to Navy Day visitors.

NUMBER CHANGES ARE DUE TO THREE FACTORS

Telephone Growth Accounts for Most New Numbers Assigned

Telephone numbers are changed, usually, for one of three reasons: either because of a subscriber's change of address, a change in the type of service, or rearrangement of telephone plant on account of growth.

New Address Means New Number

In cities with more than one telephone central office, each office can serve subscribers only within a certain area, so that if a subscriber moves out of one central office district and into another he naturally must have a different telephone number in the new district.

But in case of a change of address within the same central office district, a change in number is usually necessary only for party line subscribers. On manually operated party lines, the line number is shared by all the subscribers on the line, and if one of them moves to an area served by another line, the old line cannot be assigned to him.

Follows Change in Service

The second reason for changing telephone numbers is due to a change in type of service. If a subscriber has a two-party line, for example, and desires to change to individual-line service, it is then usually necessary to assign him a line for his exclusive use and this of course necessitates a new number.

Plant Changes May Be Cause

Additions to and rearrangements of telephone plant and equipment, made necessary by normal growth of the service, are also responsible for number changes. The establishment of new central offices, the change from manual to dial operation, a regrouping of lines so they may be more efficiently utilized, and the providing of additional facilities for some telephone users all contribute to better and more convenient service, but such plant rearrangements mean a consequent change in telephone numbers.

Changing telephone numbers always means added effort and expense for the telephone company, so that a subscriber's number is never changed without a good reason, which is usually one of the three mentioned.

'How Is Business?' Sales Manager Asks 194 Agents by Telephone

L. H. Thompson, vice president in charge of domestic sales, National Cash Register Company, at left, conversing with one of the 194 sales agents with whom he talked.

When L. H. Thompson, vice president in charge of domestic sales of the National Cash Register Company, recently wanted to talk personally with all his sales agents in the United States and Canada, to stimulate a sales contest, he did not have time to visit each one. Nor was it necessary to call the men to the home office from their territories.

Instead, seated in his office in Dayton, O., Vice President Thompson talked, over 153,190 miles of telephone wire, with his 194 sales agents. Each man had been advised a week in advance of the hour and minute when Mr. Thompson would call him. The talks were three minutes each, and the connections were completed without loss of time and without operating error.

The results were satisfactory to Mr. Thompson. Incidentally he was able to obtain for his Board of Directors opinions as to business and industrial conditions in every section of this country and Canada.

Our Pet Peeve

May Egyptians Claim Laurels of Columbus?

The Abbe Moreux, director of the Bourges observatory, and author of a work on "The Mysterious Science of the Pharaohs," has come out with a theory that, centuries before Columbus, Egyptians discovered America.

Otherwise, how did it happen that, when Columbus arrived, he found the Indians calling the constellations of heavenly bodies by names corresponding to those now known to have been bestowed upon them by the ancient Egyptians?

Again, as the Abbe Moreux informs us in Le Petit Parisien, "a savant, Moustafa Ibrahim Bey, has just demonstrated that certain geographical names in America are derived from ancient Egyptians, where, for example, 'Mississippi' means 'Father of Waters.'"

Still again, "In Mexico we find pyramids, hieroglyphs, and sculptures in which the human beings, especially in their mode of hair-dressing, exactly resemble those shown in ancient Egyptian paintings."

But would an expedition analogous to that of Columbus have been possible in the days of the Pharaohs? According to Ibrahim Bey, Rameses II had a ship 280 cubits long built by Phoenicians, and we know that the ancient Egyptians perfectly understood the use of sails. In the Seventh century, B. C., "Egyptians circumnavigated Africa." Those mariners, thinks the Abbe Moreux, may later have risked a voyage to America.

Thus the company of pre-Columbian discoverers of America increases, and to Norsemen and negroes these subjects of ancient Pharaohs are, if not a universally plausible addition, at least entertaining.—Literary Digest.

The Tragedy of Peggy Shippen Arnold

Major John Andre

The Conspirators — Arnold and Andre

Benedict Arnold

Mrs. Benedict Arnold and her Son

Sketch of Peggy Shippen by Major Andre

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ON JUNE 11, 1780, Edward Shippen, a prominent attorney and judge of the vice-admiralty court of Philadelphia, sat him down at his desk and to his father wrote a letter in which occurs this significant sentence: "My Peggy this morning made me a present of a fine Baby, which tho' of the worst Sex, is yet heartily welcome." Could Judge Shippen have looked into the future one wonders if he might not have struck out those words "is yet heartily welcome," for, according to some historians, this "fine Baby" was destined to prove herself, in the judge's strangely prophetic words, "of the worst Sex" indeed and it is not unlikely that there came times when the judge wished she had never been born.

For this baby, who was given her mother's name of Margaret, was to become one of the most glamorous figures in American history, was to be a belle of colonial days, the toast of both British and Continental officers during the Revolution, the young wife of a distinguished American general and a participant in the chain of events which was to blacken his name with infamy among his countrymen for all time and to besmirch her name as well.

Was Peggy Shippen Arnold an innocent victim of the treason of her husband, Benedict Arnold, or was she the arch-conspirator who used her wiles to lead him into the mire of that unforgivable crime? Did she really love him for himself and prove her devotion to him by voluntarily sharing his disgrace and exile from his native land, or did she marry him while she was in love with another man and because of her infatuation aid that other man in carrying forward the plot which was to ruin the man whose name she bore?

Those are the questions that have been brought up by research into documents of the Revolutionary war period which have recently become available to the historians and it seems impossible to give conclusive answers because the historians themselves do not agree. The traditional view of Peggy Shippen Arnold is that she was an innocent victim.

A recent biographer of Arnold, Charles Coleman Sellers, in his "Benedict Arnold, the Proud Warrior," declares: "I know of no evidence sufficient to implicate Peggy Shippen Arnold in the Arnold treason plot. I do not attach any importance to her correspondence with Major Andre, for she was writing to other British friends also. Her letters to Andre seem harmless. It is true she was under suspicion after the plot was exposed and had to leave Philadelphia. I think it is rather far-fetched, though, to accuse her of being a traitor."

Just as positive on the other side is E. Irvine Haines, author of two articles on this subject in the New York Times Magazine last year. He says "A careful study of evidence heretofore unknown or overlooked leads to the conviction that she was not only guilty but, even more than her husband, one of the arch-conspirators. Recent discoveries in the private correspondence of Sir Henry Clinton, in an almost unknown diary of Aaron Burr, and in Peggy's own letters, some of them addressed in code to Major Andre himself furnish testimony too damning for Peggy to controvert were she alive and on trial.

"If we re-read the story of the Revolution's greatest personal tragedy in the light of what we know now, it becomes a drama of ambitious femininity unique in American annals. It was not the game-legged, hot-tempered, disgruntled hero of Quebec and Saratoga who was the real mover in the plot on the Continental side, but the ambitious Tory girl, the spy and tool of Clinton, who schemed so cleverly that she deceived such astute politicians as John Hancock, John Adams, Alexander Hamilton and even Washington himself. It was Clinton acting on the suggestion of Lord George Germain, the British colonial secretary, who conceived the conspiracy, but it was Peggy Shippen, with a skill and effrontery amazing in one so young, who carried it out."

A more moderate view—one which takes a somewhat middle ground between these two extremes—is that of Randolph G. Adams, custodian of the William L. Clements library of American History at the University of Michigan, which acquired the military papers of Sir Henry Clinton a few years ago. From these papers Mr. Adams has pieced together the "inside story" of Arnold's treason and he says: "Historians have usually acquitted Peggy Shippen of any complicity in her husband's treason, but the Clinton papers give many indications of another story. It is difficult now to avoid the conclusion that Mrs. Arnold certainly handled some of the secret dispatches, and that the same spies who carried the dispatches were also used to carry personal messages to Andre and the other British officers she had known in Philadelphia."

In telling the story of the tragedy of Peggy Shippen Arnold one only has available a few—a very few, albeit—known facts over which there can be no dispute and a larger number of other facts which are capable of different interpretations depending upon the writer's point of view towards the different actors in the drama of Arnold's treason. We know the date of her birth, something of her activities as a belle of Philadelphia society immediately before and during the early years of the Revolution, the date of her marriage to Arnold, something of her career as his wife in this country and while sharing his exile in England and the date of her death. But as to her motives, her real character and the actual part she played in the conspiracy of her husband to betray his country the evidence is extremely contradictory.

Haines makes out an exceedingly strong case against her as the arch-conspirator, the villainess of the piece. Briefly, his story is this: As the daughter of a prominent colonial family, strongly Tory in its sympathies, Peggy Shippen had been reared in an atmosphere of luxury, had been taught to admire the British military caste, had dreamed of marrying into that caste and of becoming a great lady in the courts of Europe.

She first met John Andre, then a lieutenant in the Royal English Fusiliers, in 1774 when Sir Guy Carleton, governor-general of Canada, sent him to Philadelphia as a secret agent, going under the name of John Anderson, to spy on the First Continental Congress then in session in the Pennsylvania capital. She was then only fourteen years old but already possessed of great beauty, and Andre, himself only twenty-four years old, fell in love with her and she with him.

After he left Philadelphia she corresponded with him but she did not see him again until 1777 when she visited in New York city, where he was now a captain on the staff of Sir Henry Clinton, the British commander's protégé and his secret agent as he had been for Sir Guy Carleton. Their love affair progressed and returning to Philadelphia, which was at this time held by the Continental forces, she continued her correspondence with Andre.

Then Washington lost the battles of Brandywine and Germantown and the British took possession of Philadelphia, bringing Peggy and Andre together again. She helped him organize the series of pageants, called the "Miscianza," given by the British officers on the eve of the departure of General Howe, British commander in Philadelphia, for England and she was chosen, as the most beautiful girl in Philadelphia, to preside over them as queen.

But in June, 1778, the British evacuated Philadelphia and Andre and Peggy were separated once more. In the meantime the British ministry, realizing that the rebellious colonies could not be defeated by force, resorted to treachery to accomplish its ends. It was the idea of Lord Germain, British secretary of war, that some of the American leaders could be bought off and Clinton fell in with the scheme.

But the British plan to seduce American leaders was getting nowhere until June, 1778, when the Continental forces again occupied Philadelphia and Gen. Benedict Arnold was made military governor of the city. Then, says Haines: "By this time Peggy Shippen was deep in the Tory conspiracy. At least three times during the winter of 1777-78 she had carried important letters from spies in Philadelphia to British agents in New York. Galloway and Germain determined to use her to break down Arnold. A patriot by early conviction, Arnold soon was led to favor Peggy's family and their Tory friends. A man originally of simple tastes, he was lured into extravagance by the pace set by the Shippen entertainments. A widower, twenty years older than Peggy, he was flattered by her apparent preference for him."

"In April, 1779, Arnold and Peggy were married. That she could have preferred this lame, middle-aged Continental general to Andre is not conceivable. There is evidence that it was Andre, not Arnold, whom she loved, and that she presently wished to escape from the web which she herself had helped to spin. Her family and relations brought tremendous pressure to bear upon her, as their letters show. Elizabeth Tilghman, writing to Peggy's sister, Elizabeth, says that 'poor Peggy was burgoynd' into marrying Arnold.

"In April, 1779 (the very month and year in which the unhappy marriage took place) Sir Henry Clinton was sure for the first time that Arnold had become so deeply enmeshed in the net of intrigue that the conspirators had woven about him that the great climax of the conspiracy was at hand."

Arnold, influenced by his wife (according to some historians), sought and, after being refused once, obtained command at West Point, the key to the whole Continental defense system. He corresponded in code with both Andre and Clinton. His wife also continued to write to Andre and to receive letters from him.

Haines declares that the "millinery letters" which passed between Peggy and Andre, having to do with the purchase of various articles of clothing, were code messages relating to the plans for handing West Point over to the British. Randolph Adams, from his researches among the Clinton papers in the University of Michigan library, says of this:

"A son had been born to Arnold and Peggy Shippen just before the treason. We have actual evidence of her desire to buy baby's clothing in New York, for there were no shops in West Point like those in lower Manhattan. Her list of demands for 'pink ribbon' and 'diaper clouting' is among the other papers, sent by one of the British spies to New York.

"The spectacle of the rejected suitor, Major Andre, buying these articles for Benedict Arnold's baby does not usually figure in history. Yet the number of times that the wants of the Arnold baby figure in the correspondence is significant of some knowledge on Mrs. Arnold's part that her husband was engaging in a rather familiar correspondence with the British headquarters."

Adams also declares that "An examination of Andre's papers in the Clinton collection serves only to blacken yet more the character of Benedict Arnold." But Haines, who is convinced of Peggy Shippen's guilt, says of Arnold: "Traitor he was; but he was also betrayed, and by means of an influence to which many of the great of the earth have been susceptible—the lure of a beautiful woman."

But whatever Peggy Shippen's part in the conspiracy, she paid bitterly for it in the end. When a series of blunders resulted in the premature exposure of the plot she found herself left behind by her husband when he fled to the British; she soon learned that Andre, her lover (if he was her lover), was to die on the scaffold; and she went back to Philadelphia, only to be expelled from her native city as "dangerous to the public safety." During the remaining years of the war she lived in New York with British and Tory friends while her husband fought with the British against his former comrades.

When the Revolution ended she went with him to England and there she had a brief taste of the glory she had hoped for. She was welcomed as a national heroine, publicly thanked at the court of King George and given a pension of 500 pounds a year and a bonus of 350 pounds for "meritorious services." But even though the Arnolds won the gratitude of the British officials, the English public would have none of them. They were slighted and insulted in society and Peggy's triumph was short-lived. "The final chapter is the dead ashes of disillusionment," writes Haines. "Arnold died in poverty. Yet after his death, as she herself wrote, Peggy paid off all his debt, 'within four or five hundred pounds' and still had left 'property and investments of her own.' She lived three years longer than he, dying in 1804 at the early age of forty-four—too soon, by some decades, to sit to Thackeray, as she might well have done, for his portrait of Becky Sharp."

Those results are due to a scientific discovery by which a Bayer Aspirin Tablet begins to dissolve, or disintegrate, in the amazing space of two seconds after touching moisture. And hence to start "taking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking.

The illustration of the glass, here, tells the story. A Bayer Tablet starts to disintegrate almost instantly you swallow it. And thus is ready to go to work almost instantly.

When you buy, though, see that you get the Genuine BAYER Aspirin. For Bayer Aspirin's quick relief always say "BAYER Aspirin."

WHY BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST

Drop a Bayer Tablet in a glass of water. Note that BEFORE it touches bottom, it has started to disintegrate. What it does in this glass it does in your stomach. Hence its fast action.

STUDENTS MAN PRINCETON SWITCHBOARD IN EVENING

Telephone service at Princeton University is handled by girl telephone operators during the day, by students in the evening, and by the campus police after midnight.

There are 325 telephones on the campus, involving 290 miles of wire, and according to statistics recently compiled by University authorities, the daily average number of calls from the campus is more than a thousand.

Thirteen trunk lines lead to the University private branch exchange, in the east wing of Nassau Hall. Girl operators are on duty up to 6 o'clock in the evening, when the University switchboard is turned over to students, who alternate on the job until midnight.

By then most of the telephones are disconnected and the thirteen trunk lines are connected to such places as the infirmary or the police office, from which it might be necessary to make emergency calls. Any one off the campus calling the University number after midnight gets the police office, where he learns the night number of whatever extension he wishes to call.

Four Brothers Total 143 Years Of Service With the Bell System

Frederick

George

Joseph

Harry

Every three months another year is added to the Bell System service record of the Brett family—four brothers, three in the Michigan Bell Telephone Company and one in the Ohio Bell Telephone Company, whose combined years in the business total 143, with a combined age of only 206 years. All are members of the Telephone Pioneers of America, an organization of men and women who have had more than 21 years of telephone service.

The holders of that composite record are George J. Brett, general auditor, Harry J. Brett, supervisor of supplies, and Joseph H. Brett, supervisor in the commercial department at Detroit, all in the Michigan Bell Telephone Company organization; and Frederick B. Brett, chief accountant of the Ohio Bell Telephone Company. All four brothers began their telephone careers in the accounting department of the Michigan Company at Detroit. George Brett began work as a messenger, in 1890; Harry, as an office boy, in 1897; Frederick, as an office boy, in 1899; and Joseph, as a clerk, in 1901. Frederick remained with the Michigan company until 1911 when he was transferred to the accounting department of the Central Group of telephone companies in Chicago, later going to Indiana and then to Ohio.

The Bell System shows a number of such instances of three or more brothers, or brothers and sisters, in the service.

Signaling by Drums

In South Africa messages are signaled by means of drums made of bark, the tappings on which can be heard many miles away. It is by this method that the defeat of Sir Redvers Buller at Colenso was made known to natives 60 miles distant in the space of two hours.
